

Maile Osika

Associate

Maile Osika solves problems and loves a good challenge. Her practice focuses on commercial, medical malpractice, intellectual property, construction, and real property litigation. In addition, Maile handles other business, public finance, and real property transactions. Maile dedicates time to public interest issues and has worked on several civil rights litigation matters in federal court.

Prior to joining the firm, Maile worked as a legislative attorney for the State of Hawai'i House of Representatives where she drafted legislation, provided legal advice to representatives and committee chairs, and analyzed the legal ramifications of proposed legislation. She worked closely with the committees on Agriculture and Economic Business Development & Tourism.

Maile also worked as legal research assistant to Professor Jon Van Dyke, a Constitutional and International Law scholar at the William S. Richardson School of Law, where she conducted extensive research on constitutional law, environmental law, indigenous peoples, public access, ocean law, and international law issues. Maile co-authored Public Access to Roads and Trails on West Maui with Van Dyke and made significant research contributions to a number of Van Dyke's other publications.

Maile was born and raised in Hawai'i. She earned her J.D. from the William S. Richardson School of Law and also has a bachelor's degree in Political Science from Boston College.
